Pick your goal and tick off the steps

1. Decide what you need

- [ ] Decide whether you need a list, a restorable copy, a copy on another account, or a share link.
  The sections below are in that order. Skip the ones you do not need.
- [ ] Count what you have, so you know how big the job is.
  A very large playlist is worth backing up before any edit.

2. Keep the list

- [ ] Export the playlist to a spreadsheet: title, channel, link and duration for every video.
  A CSV opens in Excel or Google Sheets and survives even if videos are later deleted.
  YouTube Playlist Export
- [ ] Export several playlists at once instead of one by one.
  Useful for a whole channel's playlists or a year-end archive.
  Bulk YouTube Playlist Export
- [ ] Export YouTube Music playlists the same way.
  Keeps track and artist details for your music library.

3. Keep a restorable copy

- [ ] Back up the playlist so you can rebuild it if videos or the playlist disappear.
  A backup is the only record of what was in it once a video is removed.

4. Move it to another account

- [ ] Transfer playlists to a new or second YouTube account.
  Handy when you switch channels or want a work and a personal account kept separate.

- [ ] Check the privacy setting on the new account matches what you want.
  Set private, unlisted or public deliberately.

5. Share it

- [ ] Set the playlist to public or unlisted before sharing.
  A private playlist cannot be opened by anyone else.

- [ ] Open the share link in a private window to see what other people see.

- [ ] Run a quick check for hidden videos before you send it.
  A playlist full of [Deleted video] entries looks careless.
